Social and Personal

The First Presbyterian Church in Danville was the scene of a lovely wedding last evening at 8 o'clock, when Miss Blanche Lacy Patton, daughter of Mrs. Julius Allen Patton, became the bride of George Horace Flowers, formerly of Durham, N. C., but now of this city. The handsome church was banked with tall palms and many lighted candles, and garlands of Southern smilax, festooned with tulle, outlined the windows and doorways of the edifice.
Standards of white lilies marked the reserved pews, and white flowers and cathedral candles were used on the altar. The Rev. W. R. Laird performed the ceremony, in the presence of a large company of invited guests, and Miss Jessie Brewer played the wedding music.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her brother, Henry C. Patton, who gave her in marriage. Her wedding gown was an exquisite affair of white charmeuse, heavily embroidered in seed pearls, and her long veil of illusion fell to the end of her court train, which was also embroidered in pearls.
She carried a slender bouquet of lilies of the valley, and orange blossoms infused the cap of duchess lace, with which her veil was held in place. The dame of honor, Mrs. James Scales Irvin, sister of the bride, wore a handsome gown of lavender crepe de chine, and carried a large bunch of pink orchids.

Miss Kathryn Hixon, who was maid of honor, was gowned in palest pink charmeuse with lines of lace, and carried an armful of pink roses. W. W. Flowers, of Durham, N. C., attended his brother as best man.
The bridesmaids wore fascinating frocks of turquoise blue crepe de chine, made with lavender girdles, and the blue chiffon drapery of the skirts was wired and edged with blue marabou.
Their bouquets were artistically arranged of purple aster tied with long tulle streamers to match. They were Misses Nancy Patton, of Richmond; Irma Allen, of Danville; Irma Joyner, Theodosia Gray, of Winston-Salem, N. C., and Miss Estelle Flowers, of Durham, N. C. The ushers included Peter Arrington, of New York City; E. G.
Curran, of Richmond; Robert Flowers and R. P. Reade, both of Durham, N. C.; Dr. James S. Irvin and John E.
Hughes, of Danville, and the groom-smen were Albert Patton, J. Hannon Schoolfield, Dr. T. B. Pierce, of Durham, N. C.; John Littlepage Ingram, of Richmond; and Peter Patton, of Pittsburgh. The bridesmaids and groomsmen entered the church from doors on either side of the chancel, and went down the aisle to meet the bride.
A large reception was given at the home of the bride's mother immediately after the ceremony at the church. Decorations were carried out in full, and all of the lights were shaded in rose color. Mr. and Mrs. Flowers have gone to Canada on their honeymoon, and will be at home after November 1 in Richmond at 501 West Grace Street, which house they have taken for the winter season.
Some of the guests from a distance attending the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Gilmor Minor, Jr., of Richmond; Mr. and Mrs. James D. Patton and James D. Patton, Jr., of this city; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Flowers and Colonel W. Flowers, of Durham; Mr. and Mrs.
W. T. Jones, of New York City; Mr. and Mrs. Ashby Watts, of Lynchburg; Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hampton, of Plymouth, marriage of Miss Louise Crutchfield, daughter of George Crutchfield, to Dr.

Lawrence Taylor Price, also of this city, the wedding to take place on Crutchfield has been a member of the church of Monumental Church for some time, and her wedding to Dr. Price this month will be an important and interesting event.

SELECTED AS RULER OF STATE OF ALBANIA

Prince William of Wied Chosen by Great Powers as Suited to Reign.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.
IT is Prince William of Wied, and not his elder brother, Frederick, who has been selected by the great powers of Europe as best suited to reign over the new independent State of Albania, with the title of King. The press on both sides of the Atlantic made the mistake of imagining that Prince Frederick, married to the only child of the present King of Wurtemberg, was their choice.

Prince William, a very tall, handsome man, is in a line of succession to the crown of his first cousin, Queen Wilhelmine of the Netherlands, has already considerable interests in the Southeast of Europe, through his wife, who owns extensive estates in Roumania, including extremely valuable oil wells, she inherited these from her Roumanian grandmother, Mme.
Cantacuzene, her co-heir being her brother, Prince Gunther of Schoen-burg-Waldenburg, who spent several months in America last spring, with a view of acquainting himself with American methods of developing oil-bearing lands, and the routine pursued by the Standard Oil Company in the distribution of the product, in order to apply them to the property which he and his sister, Princess William of Wied, own in Roumania.

The greater part of the princess's girlhood was passed in Roumania with her Cantacuzene grandmother and relatives, and she was frequently asked to visit her father, the Emperor of Austria, in Vienna. She was a member of the house of "Queen" Catherine, who became very fond of her. For the princess is wonderfully gifted, and an altogether remarkable musician, not only a talented pianist and singer, but also perhaps the finest amateur harpist in Europe. Prince William of Wied has always been the favorite nephew of the Queen, a sister of his father, and it was she who brought about the marriage of Princess Sophia of Schoen-burg-Waldenburg with this nephew of hers. The relationship of the Roumanian Cantacuzenes with those of Russia, to which Prince Michael Cantacuzene, son-in-law of the late General Frederick D. Grant, United States America, belongs, is somewhat remote, and it is necessary to go back 150 years to establish it.

That Prince William of Wied is a capable man, is best shown by the fact that he passed with flying colors the extremely difficult examination qualifying him to become a member of the corps d'elite of the German army, the general staff corps. Both he and his wife are wonderful linguists, and in addition to being able to speak faultless English and French, are equally at home in Roumanian, Spanish, and Potsdam, where they have until now made their home, they are very popular in society, and will be much missed, especially the tall, handsome princess, who in Berlin has taken an active part in the management of the technical schools for women, where the latter are taught various trades, arts and industries.

The Wieds are one of the mediatized or formerly reigning families of Germany, which retained a number of their old-time prerogatives, including that of mating on a footing of perfect equality with the now sovereign dynasties of Europe. Thus, the mother of Prince William of Wied was Princess Elizabeth of Prussia, daughter of Frederick of Wied, as I have stated above, is the husband of the only daughter of the King of Wurtemberg, while Princess Elizabeth of Wied is Queen of Roumania. In this way the Wieds are closely related to the royal houses of Holland, Wurtemberg, and Roumania, as well as to those of Prussia, Sweden and Great Britain.

The name of the Prince of Wied is Every Contestant Can Be Ten Contestants--It's The Rule

Or Rather Every Contestant May Submit His Ten Best Ideas on Better get a firm grip on the Book-lovers' Contest rule which permits as many as ten different answers to be submitted to each picture.

It is probable, if you are of an ingenious turn of mind, that you have on hand several titles to each picture which you would like to submit.

And will it not be shameful for you to place the full result of your ingenuity in competition with the full result of the ingenuity of all other contestants?

If only one answer to each picture were allowed the contest might deteriorate into a guessing match, with the prizes going to the luckiest.

As it is, however, the element of not unknown on this side of the Atlantic. For that widely known work, "Early Western Travels," published by Herbert J. Clark Company, contains an account of Prince Maximilian of Wied's "Travels in the Interior of North America," translated from the German. In 1821 this prince, then thirty-nine years of age, undertook a scientific expedition of the Trans-Mississippi region, and en route spent some time in Boston, and gives a graphic description of the celebration of the Fourth of July there in 1822.

The bride and groom were in the streets were collected in the promenade called the Common. All Boston, rich and poor, was here assembled, in the most elegant dress. His description of the oyster feast, of the fireworks of the gray and motley uniforms of the militia, and especially the fact that the bands of musicians of the various regiments were civilian dress of all colors, with round hats, and particularly, "the absence of all impropriety of conduct, or unseemly noise," seems to indicate that the affair created a deep impression upon him.

Many of Lord Beaconsfield's most important letters are now in the hands of collectors in the United States, a fact which it is interesting to bear in mind in connection with the impending publication of the life and correspondence of this celebrated statesman, now in course of publication in England.

It seems that in 1855 the London publishing house of Murray issued a volume entitled "Lord Beaconsfield's Home Letters, Written in 1850-1851." This was followed in 1882 by "Lord Beaconsfield's Correspondence With His Sister, 1831 to 1852." After the publication of these books, the letters upon which they were based were sold, and most of them have come to America. Some of them remain behind, and they are of such an unvarnished character as to leave no doubt as to the racy nature of those which are now in America. They were printed in a saddled and bowdlerized form in the two books which I have mentioned.
It is, indeed, the portions of the letters that are omitted, which furnish the most interesting feature thereof.

To give an instance: there is one letter written by Lord Beaconsfield to his sister, from the House of Commons, dated March 23, 1841, in which he describes a quarrel between Mr. Birch-tutor of the then eight-year-old Prince of Wales, and the prince consort, owing to the latter offering objections to having his eldest son taught the catechism of the Church of England.
Mr. Birch threatened to resign, and to make public the cause of his resignation, unless he had his way; and the matter, after having been put up to the Queen and to the Premier of the day, was decided against the prince consort, and in favor of the tutor and of the catholicism. Commenting on this, Disraeli writes that he wonders to what degree the prince consort wished the Prince of Wales to be brought up, whether it was "Lutheranism, Panthe-ism, or Buddhism."

It is difficult to conceive what Queen Victoria would have said if she could have known of the disrespectful, contemptuous manner in which Lord Beaconsfield had written about the heretic catholicism. Commenting on this, Dis-
Prince of Wales to be brought up,
whether it was "Lutheranism, Panthe-
ism, or Buddhism."

The volumes of "Lord Beaconsfield's Life and Letters," now being published in London, of which two volumes have already appeared, will not be complete unless all these letters in the hands of American collectors are included; and if this is impossible, it may be hoped that some particularly eminent literary man on this side of the Atlantic so that in reviewing the official "Life and Correspondence of Lord Beaconsfield," he may be able to compare in print the letters therein contained, with the unpublished letters in America.
